Tijori – Financial Literacy Initiative — Mumbai, India

Founder & Writer — April 2024 – November 2024

- Wrote financial literacy content tailored to daily wage workers and low-income families, breaking down complex concepts like budgeting, inflation, and savings into clear, actionable guidance specific to their economic realities. Recognized early that existing resources ignored the constraints and priorities of working-class communities, and built content explicitly addressing those gaps.
- Distributed financial guides across eight regional languages through social media i.e. WhatsApp Communities, reaching workers through their existing communication channels rather than expecting them to seek out resources on external platforms. Ensured that simplified financial information reached populations typically excluded from institutional banking and investment conversations.
- Facilitated interactive workshops presenting case studies and financial scenarios to community members. Participants began making concrete financial decisions; opening savings accounts, exploring pilot investments in mutual funds and stock within weeks of attending, demonstrating measurable impact from the program and validating the model for broader implementation.
